Pictured: Depositphotos.com wedding anniversary is an important opportunity for a married couple, but it's also a time for friends and loved ones to celebrate the couple. Whether you invite you to an anniversary party or want to mark a few years together, it may not come as naturally as sitting down to write an anniversary card and writing birthday or other congratulatory wishes. It's easy to send a short text or chat to let them know you're thinking about them on a couple's anniversary, but writing a card adds a more personal touch. A card requires a little more effort but etiquette expert Elaine Swann shares her wisdom in texting the best for anniversary card wishes. Meet expert Elaine Swann, an expert in etiquette and founder of the Swann School of Protocol. In 2020, their own greeting cards will be released. Swann says keep the card as simple as possible. Part of the reason we're having trouble writing anniversary cards is because we're trying to write a long message to the couple. Then we don't send the card or send it too late. Sometimes, it's just thought that really matters. You're not expected to be writing the next big American novel. Just write from the heart. Swann stresses the importance of being able to take the time to find the perfect greeting card instead of stressing about what to write. Don't be afraid to let the greeting card to do business for you, swann says. [In the greeting card industry,] people are paid a lot of money to create thoughtful and Message. If you're having trouble finding words, spend extra time choosing the right card. Some great greeting cards are available even if there is no one coming with them, you can find the perfect words. Take inspiration from classic quotes that capture exactly what you want to say. Each couple has had their own rough patches, but an anniversary card is not the time to open old wounds. It's especially about couples writing anniversary cards to each other. Swann suggests that you don't talk about any struggles or fights unless there are external forces that you two are fighting together. If he forgave you for something, don't bring him back! The length and message of your anniversary card depends entirely on your relationship with the couple. To help you, we've prepared examples of what you can write for every person in your life: Honor your partner's great contributions to your life and family. When you have your children with you and raise them, it's very important to accept them. Women often wear many hats in their marriage and are not always well-liked for everything they do. It's her day to let her know how much you love her. Dear (Wife's name), Happy birthday, honey! I love you very much.
